Egyptian non-oil exports to Jordan climbed by 22.5 percent to record $167 million during the first four months of 2017, Egypt's Industry Minister Tarek Qabil said Wednesday. Meanwhile, Egypt's imports from Jordan amounted to $29 million during the same period, Qabil stated. The Egyptian minister further added that the trade between the two countries rose by 18.5 percent to reach $196 million during the period from January to April 2017. Moreover, Qabil referred that Jordanian investments in Egypt involve 1,634 projects of $532 million in different sectors, including services, industry, financing, construction, and agriculture as well as communications and tourism.

Kingdom resumes exportation to UAE as ban ended

Jordan on Wednesday resumed exporting all types of fruits and vegetables to the United Arab Emirates after the latter ended a 70-day ban on some of the Kingdom's produce, according to a government official. Agriculture sector representatives welcomed the decision, underlining that it will help ease the deteriorating state of the sector, ministry spokesperson Nimer Haddadin told The Jordan Times. The UAE lifted its ban on some of the country's fruits and vegetables after its officials and technical teams visited the country several times over the past month upon the request of the ministry to check firsthand on the Kingdom's measures in ensuring safe agricultural production, Haddadin said. The Gulf state enforced in mid-May a decision to ban the import of seven of Jordan's main vegetable exports due to claims of increasing levels of chemical pesticide residues found in Jordanian agricultural products. The banned vegetables included zucchini, sweet pepper, eggplant, cabbage, green beans, cauliflower and lettuce.
