Attracting investments turns refugee crisis into opportunity — economists

The social and economic repercussions of hosting refugees in Jordan requires all stakeholders to enhance cooperation in addressing challenges and tensions, economists said on Tuesday. Ahmad Qatanani, an economist and former Prime Ministry consultant, called for developing a comprehensive socioeconomic plan, in partnership with the private sector and donor countries, to enhance Jordan's economy mainly by encouraging investments. The Kingdom has secured 60 per cent of the funding required under the 2016 Jordan Response Plan to the Syrian crisis — double what was obtained in each of the previous three years, according to the Ministry of Planning and International Cooperation. Qatanani elaborated that encouraging more investments in qualified industrial zones will generate more job opportunities for young Jordanians and refugees, and would "turn tense competition into fruitful cooperation". Citing youth unemployment figures in Jordan reaching 25 per cent, the economist suggested the "gradual" replacement of guest workers from various nationalities with Syrians, saying that this would enhance the economy, as they spend their income in Jordan and do not transfer money to their home countries.

'Regional conflicts could affect Jordan's sustainable development'

Jordan's sustainable development goals could be threatened by the consequences of regional conflicts, a meeting of the Higher National Committee on Sustainable Development (HNCSD) heard on Wednesday, according to a statement released by the Ministry of Planning and International Cooperation. Chaired by Planning and International Cooperation Minister Imad Fakhoury, the meeting discussed the implementation of a national strategy to apply the Sustainable Development Global Agenda (SGDA) 2030. Fakhoury described the SDGA 2030, adopted in 2015 by His Majesty King Abdullah, alongside other world leaders, as an "ambitious agenda that took into consideration all issues and dimensions of sustainable development". Speaking to committee members, the minister said a plan has been drawn up to implement the SDGA 2030, with a focus on community awareness and a sense of ownership for all stakeholders.

Jordan to host International Energy Summit in April

The Kingdom will host the third Jordan International Energy Summit (JIES) on April 2-3, according to a statement released by the Energy Ministry. The JIES is centred around "a world-class programme" with speakers from governments, global energy companies and experts in their fields, and is combined with an international exhibition to allow companies to showcase their projects and expertise, whilst giving Jordan access to the latest technologies and products, the statement said.
