'Does Jordan have a financial crisis?' — panellists debate at Jordan agenda conference 2018

Increasing business productivity, transparency and integrity were a few of the solutions discussed on Thursday at the session "Financial crisis: Reality and Expectations" at the Jordan Agenda Conference 2018, organised by the Centre for Strategic Studies of the University of Jordan. Panellists acknowledged certain realities of the Kingdom's current economic problem, such as its limited natural resources, the critical unrest surrounding its borders and the refugee crisis but commended Jordan for where it stands today. "Despite our budget deficit, we have been able to achieve great developments in our infrastructure, and the health and education sector," said Jordan's Central Bank Governor Ziad Fariz. "In comparison to other countries in the region, our sales taxes are relatively low and the tax on income is less than 3 per cent," he added. However, both panellists and audience members agreed that more can be done in order to achieve a more favourable economic situation. Basem Salfiti, an economist and a board member at Bank Al Etihad, suggested lowering the cost of doing business for increased revenue.
